8. The Commission cannot pay the fares of candidates or other expenses incurred in connection with an examination at interview.

9. As regards the suggestion that places should be found for all ex-soldiers in the Civil Service it is necessary to point out that there are about 6,75,000 ex-soldiers and the number of appointments made in a year in the Civil Service is about 10,000, including women.

10. The second qualifying examination under each of the above schemes will probably take place in the autumn of 1919. The home centres will be the same as for the first examination, and there may also be overseas centres. The Ex-soldiers Board will at about a month later and will reference such candidates as are then ready. They will be at least two years from the date of the declaration of peace to allow of the acquisition of persons in the most distant parts of the world. There will be some persons whose posts, under No. 10, up the application form with their own hands. The filling of vacancies will be spread over the period during which the examination scheme are in force so that the small jobs who are described in the list shall have a good chance of securing the service in which they are described in the earlier stages.

11. Ex-soldiers' List Scheme.—While in the exceptional circumstances of the Reconstruction period it is imperative to preserve all pre-war privileges and to limit the permanent civil service to merit for open competitive examinations but a large portion of an age above the normal will without question of the nature of their education, corresponding advantages are provided for—

(1) more extensive special protection within a department is accorded with the recommendation of the Third Indian Report of Viscount Balfour's Committee on Recruitment for the Civil Service after the War, and

(2) in special instances from one department to another in accordance with Treasury Circular No. 4135 of 25th January 1919.

As further open competitive examinations for the above designs are unlikely, the assistant clerks have the further advantage that any appointments to the second division in the future will most probably be made from their ranks.
